Specialist industrial door manufacturer Jewers Doors have installed two 'thresholdless' versions of their Kingfisher sliding door system in Boathouse 4 at Portsmouth's Historic Dockyard.

The Challenge

Boathouse 4 is an important historic building which is a very active centre building and restoring large boats. It was important that once the doors were slid back, there would be no obstruction to the movement of large, heavy boats or materials.

Practicality

These Kingfisher straight-sliding doors have been custom designed to allow unrestricted access when fully opened and moving large, heavy materials between the workshops. An integral wicket door allows staff and students access between the workshops when the main sliding door is closed.

Easy Safe Access

Each Kingfisher straight-sliding door is top-hung from Jewers own pendant hanger and top track system. Instead of incorporating traditional bottom tracks within the floor, surface mounted torpedo guides are used to stabilise the doors. These are situated behind the adjoining walls to ensure unrestricted access between the workshops. The integral wicket door has also been designed without a bottom threshold to eliminate any trip hazard.
